Managing director's notices

Personnel appointment—June 14, 1971

Following a month's introduction into the company, Mr. G. Hicks has now joined the Personnel Department as a Selection Manager for Administrative Staff. He will work with Mr. S. E. Sutton on recruitment and follow-up, and have the additional responsibility for salaries administration and maintaining contact with our Personnel Department in the Glasgow factory.

I take this opportunity to welcome Mr. Hicks to the company and to wish him every success.

Logos gives 5 pm all-clear

Our article in a recent issue concerning the scrap dealer using a Logos, has brought more news of this lucrative partnership, this time from Plymouth branch. Back in 1969 the branch sold a Logos to a local scrap metal dealer, who was already using a Multisumma and a Prima, and wanted the calculator for work on the metal content of his stock, as well as all normal office routines.

This year, the same merchant began to show interest in another Prima, but altered this in favour of the new Logos 270, which is now working in parallel with the previous Logos. The Olivetti salesman concerned received a cheque for the machine on the spot, and explained to us that this is part of the merchant's policy, since he can now proudly boast that by 5.00 pm every day he is completely clear of any debt.

If anyone is in doubt as to the effectiveness of this system, we have been told that another salesman who recently delivered a piece of equipment—a mobile

The glory

Parthenon, staged in 1,000 'pilgrims', most appeared to be either American.

None of us had been to Greece, and few a Son et Lumiere; so sphere was one of suspense than anticipation. On the Athenian Plain and like an enormous of foot soldiers, silences into a large arena, the places on the hard work provided . . .

For nearly all of us was a disappointment. I enjoyed the occasion, but Mattack's wife, Bart, than the performance, a tame recital of epic events and ferocious battles. But where was the ritual?

We had already glimpsed Parthenon's divine from the rooftop restaurant our hotel and so it was party which set out this morning to climb the

I have seen many temples, all dissimilar in feature: they are dominated by their landscape—the wood, the mountain. The Parthenon alone. It dominates the whole Athenian Plain, but the Acropolis, whose presence comes a restricted area. Invaded by nothing. With the Erechtheion Propylaea as support. This sanctuary, instead of being out the work of Christian ones, enclosed above the sea of human life at the foot

The next day we left the coastal resort of V. where the party splashed in the clear waters of the sea and sloshed vast quantities of sun-tan oil on the parts. Murmurs of 'oh every half hour or so' Filleul were taken to the sions of his contentment. 'Oh alright once you're in Ryans' and Arthur repeated assurance to that they were not suffering from frost bite; and 'even this way' was off-camera Roger McK. hiding the fact he had in the water at all.

. . . From Vougliames Sounion, the site of the Temple beneath a little bay, where over the ships have lain wait for favourable winds to cross the Aegean to the Dardanelles, the sea to Asia Minor east to Delos, the Cretes.

Built to the sea going out over vast ocean on two sides, the most dramatic of Greece. Sounion could ever. Falling in love common as to be alive
